

Good evening Madam/ Sir,

Thank you so very much for considering my suggestions in the past (creating this group). I am back again with another idea. Please take a look at it below.

Can we think of a session at least once a fortnight where the students can demonstrate their learning? What I mean by suggesting this:

A dedicated session of at least 1 hour where the students can best demonstrate their learning. For example, a student who is good in physics can best demonstrate his favorite chapter or even a solution and how he can explain that so that others can learn from her/ him. This can become peer learning instead of teacher-led learning. Secondly, the students might know to demonstrate simple methods which at times the teacher may not have.

This can be a continuous process and can help build the capacities of many students.

In this process, the school should give chances to average students than gifted students which will build self-confidence and arouse interest in other students.

This can be done for all subjects and streams.

Please let us think of something different.

Regards