

CHAPTER-04*THE SONG OF THE WHALE

It is a about a sympathetic boy who believes we're killing whales for not necessary things.

The poet writes about the merciless and pointless killing of magnificent animals to satisfy human needs which is done for things like the whales fat, used in making soap, and in many other things including lipstick and shoe polish. I think it is pointless that these animals are being killed for things that we don't need. The poet has compared the whale to a heaving mountain who is very very sorrowful and is in the state of humongous sadness for being hunted for no fault of its own. People are killing these innocent animals to prepare cosmetic items and other unnecessary items.
