

Water cycle

The water cycle

When the sun shines, water from the rivers, ponds, lakes and oceans heats up and rises in the form of water vapour. High up in the sky, this water vapour comes in contact with cold air. It cools to form tiny drops of water. These tiny drops cling together to form clouds. On cooling further they become heavy and fall as rain. The cycle repeats many times.