Dear diary,

It was such a pondering-over night for me.

This morning while going to school, I saw a beggar asking for money; unfortunately I didn't have any money to give him, after crossing him, all sorts of thoughts flooded my mind like 'Does the government not do anything to help them?' well yes, but these facilities do not reach the grass root levels and the mediators take an advantage from these facilities except the needy. There are many private organisations who come forward to help them, but they cannot reach all the parts of the country, so with all these factors some of them stay behind and unaided. Nowadays people do not want to help them, and simply ignore them as a result the rich grow richer and the poor, poorer. And there are some excuses who would say, 'I would help but my resources provided would be misused' in the end all of us are equal and have the right to a life of dignity so, we should extend our help and support to the needy.
