(The why-why girl)

There was a girl about 10 years old, her name was Moyna. She was a Shabbar. Shabars are a tribal people, who ~~had~~ <sup>owned</sup> no land, they were very poor. Usually the Shabars didn't send their daughter for work but Moyna had to go do the work because her mother had a bad leg due to which she can't walk, her father was far away in Tar Jamshedpur in search of work, and her brothers used to go to the forest to collect the firewoods. So, Moyna had to work. Every Shabar has to work for their families, but nobody complained only Moyna's questions went on and on. One day Moyna declared that she will live with the old woman (writer). She would go for her work at morning after that she will come back to the hut. One night she asked why you always read books, then the writer replied her "because books have the answers to your whys", and for the first time she was silent. When Moyna would go for the work she would ask other children what she learnt from me. She was the first girl to be admitted to the village school. Now she is 18, she teaches at the Samiti. If you pass by her you will hear her voice telling all her students to ask question and don't be lazy. ~~She~~ Because of her other children are too learning to ask "why".
