

10/1/71

Draw and label of a structure of a leaf.

the structure of a leaf is very important in photosynthesis. The leaf is made up of many small parts called cells. These cells are arranged in layers. The top layer is called the upper epidermis. The middle part is called the mesophyll. The bottom layer is called the lower epidermis. The leaf also has small openings called stomata. These allow air to enter and leave the leaf.