Date 31/7/21 Paragraph on Indian Village

India is a land of villages. A major portion of the Indian population, approximately 72%, resides in villages. Because Indian economy is an agrarian economy. Today there are more than six lakh villages in India. Mahatma Gandhi, our Father of Nation, rightly said that real India lives in village. So the government of free India paid much attention to the lifting of the standards of Indian villagers. Now a days government has taken so many projects to solve the problems of the villagers such as education, sanitation, agriculture, health centre and road dispensing etc. The village is run by the 'Panchayat' which takes all development works.

The Indian villages having open fields with lush-green crop present a beautiful sight. The villagers live in the bosom of nature. The cool and fresh breeze of the morning, the scenes of sunrise and sunset with the farmers going to their fields along with their cattle and the tinkling of the bells tied round the necks of the cattle producing charming music are very enchanting. People enjoy different religious festivals with much pomp and ceremony. Indian village life is much better than the city life as the later is polluted in every sphere.
