

Reading - A

A) 1) what are the five things, according to the camel, that no one cares about?

Ans) According to the camel, no one cares about where it rests, eats, lives, how much load it carries or its shape.

2) which are the things that human beings can help the camel with? what is the thing that cannot be changed?

Ans) Human beings can help cats rest on chairs, chickens roost upon rails & kittens stay in warm houses.

3) How do human beings look after the living arrangements of other animals?

Ans) Human beings let cats rest on chairs, chickens roost upon rails & kittens stay in warm houses. They build stable for puppies, enclosures for flocks, cages for hens & pens for sheep.

4) which animals does the camel compare itself to?

The camel compares itself to canary-birds, parrots, poodles, bickers, puppies, oysters, lambs, hens, kittens, pigs, giraffes, oxen, rabbits, foxes, snakes, weasels, alligators & lizards.

How are the last lines of every stanza similar? What is the meaning of the word 'does' in this context?

The last lines of every stanza are similar as they all begin with "But" & say how no one cares very much about the camel. The last line of each stanza is written the style of "anything / anyplace / anywhere / any load / any shape does / does me". In all these lines, the camel is saying that no one cares about how it lives, eats or looks. The word "does" means work here.

What are the things that human beings can help the camel with? What is the thing that cannot be changed?

Human beings can help get the camel better food, more comfortable places to live & rest. They can also help to reduce the load that the camel carries.

The look, shape, size & features of the camel can be changed!

B) Think & answer.

1) How does the camel sound - unhappy, grateful, jealous, or something else? could it feel proud? Give examples to support your answer.

Ans) The camel may sound unhappy & jealous when it compares itself with other animals & describes how they have better places to live, better things to eat, & even better shapes than the camel. It even calls itself a "poor camel" because it is not cared for in the same way as other animals. The poem is also titled the "Plaint" of the camel. However, the camel could also be proud that it can adjust so well to different conditions. No matter what the place, food, or load, the camel can take care of itself.

2) What does this poem say about how helpful the camel is to human beings?

Ans) The poem mentions that the camel is something's ridden by entire families. This tells us how the camel is useful to human beings. Also, people don't bother much about what the camel does it eats or where it stays. This tells us that the camel can live & work without any special arrangements. People use camels without having to worry too much about its food or shelter.

⇒ Appreciating the Poem

1) Which two lines in each stanza have rhyming words within them? What are those rhyming words?

Ans) The first & third lines of each stanza have rhyming words within them. These are, seed / seed, good / good, aware / aware, able / able, enclosed / enclosed, treated / treated, laugh / laugh, habit / habit, round / round, alligator / alligator.

2) What makes this poem funny? would it be equally funny if it was narrated by a person other than a camel? why or why not?

Ans) The fact that the poem is narrated by a camel makes it funny. The camel compares itself to other animals in a funny way. The poem would not be so funny if it were narrated by a person because even if a person talked about the camel's complaint, they would not be able to talk about it exactly as the camel can. Only the camel can talk about its problems & get so loud & funny.
