

NERVOUS COORDINATION

This coordination is brought about by the nervous system.

When we feel hungry, we eat food. The act of eating food involves a number of coordinated activities.

Our eyes look at the food. Our brain records this information and the action starts. The arms get the message to raise. The fingers pick the food that is kept. Like this, we eat ~~the~~ food and fulfil the requirements that had arisen when we felt hungry.