(1) Why is the story called 'A slight Misunderstanding'?

Is what happens in fact a slight misunderstanding?

A- The appropriate title 'A slight misunderstanding' is a befitting title to the story narrating incident highlighting that a little care would have saved everyone's time. The farmer's wife while having a word with Mabel makes the first faux pas when she keeps her dog and the handbag in the narrator's car. The woman is a little scatterbrained who mistook the narrator's car as her own which hastened the acceleration of the story. The narrator was so beset with all the black cars, he started searching for his own car while driving already driving it. Everything becomes clear when the farmer points out the car number and the narrator is relieved.

2) Do you think the speaker's carelessness and inattention are responsible for the events of the story?

Or is it the woman's fault? Give reasons for your answer.

A- The narrator should have been a little more careful in handling these responsible affairs. He should have parked his car at a strategic location and must have checked his car before having a word for the go. ~~The~~ The woman is also equally held up for the same misunderstanding. She failed to recognize her car and kept her bag and the dog in the narrator's car which subsequently snowballed into a full fledged misunderstanding.
