

Descriptive Paragraph

Mohandas Karamchand Gandhi was not only a great politician but also a great social and religious leader. He declared the highest form of service of the great mother was social service. He gave the power of independence to the whole world and believed in humanity. He loved his countrymen very much. So, the nation called him Bapu, the Father of the Nation. Gandhiji's main principles were truth and non-violence. He believed in universal brotherhood and love. He was of the opinion that if we had conflict with Englishmen, let us not hate Englishmen because both Englishmen and Indians are offspring of same species. He respected all religions equally because he said essence of all religions is Truth. He advocated universal brotherhood over & above wavering loyalties to nations and religions. On January 30, 1948, he was shot dead by Nathu Ram Vinayak Godse in a prayer assembly in a prayer assembly at Birla House, Delhi.