

The water evaporates faster in windy conditions because wind moving over a water or land surface can carry away water vapour by drying the air. The windy condition lower the humidity and enable the air ^{to} become dry.