

The Schoolboy

THEME OF THE POEM

"The Schoolboy" is a poem included in William Blake's collection Song of Innocence. It is told from the perspective of a young boy going to school on a summere day.

The boy loves summere mornings, but he had to go to school unwillingly. He sits at his desk in ~~boredom~~ boredom and cannot pay any attention to the lesson in the class because he wishes to play outside in the natural surroundings. The authore has compared young children, so full of energy and happiness, to songbirds, who deserve to free and fly on the winds. But title

Explanation

Alas! I thought the pond: how still I lie, While all the birds can happily fly!
And so, on wings of mist, one day,
It became a ~~sea~~ cloud and floated away.

The pond too was delighted to become a cloud as it still carried its waters in the cloud. And ultimately, they would not be stuck in a place but could fly about.

The flowers and the damp were only day dreaming whereas the waters realised its dream.

~~and~~ The narrator wishes to be either a horse or a fish or a bird.
If he were a horse he would gallop in the fields. If he were a fish he would swim in the sea and if he were a bird he would ~~soar~~ soar in the blue sky.
