

plants of the grass family possess fibrous root system and do not have a tap root system. Fibrous roots spread through the soil and thus help to hold the soil more firmly compared to the tap roots. This helps prevent washing away of soil and thus, helps in conserving the soil.