Dear Diana,

Today we were taught a new lesson named 'the little girl' by Katherine Mansfield. It was about the relationship between parents and their children. I have related a lot to that story. When I was a child my life was similar to that of Kezia. Yes, my perception about my parents has changed now. As a child, I was punished for being naughty, even though my parents were quite loving and caring. As a young child, I used to be scared of their anger at my mischiefs and also found them too strict for my liking. Now, I realise that they always had their best intention in mind. Yes, there's a lot of change in my parents behaviour towards me. When I was young I used to get scolding from them even if I have done a small mistake but now I realise that they have good intentions behind scolding me. However, I feel, I have become more understanding with regards to their wishes and biddings.

A relationship based on mutual understanding is of the best sort. Hence to achieve that I would like to make as many efforts as possible on my part. Spending more time with my parents, discussing and explaining issues concerning both can help build mutual respect and regard.

Good Night!
