Nuclear Family

- by Nabin

A nuclear family system is a family structure that consists of a couple living with their children. This is quite different from an extended family system, in which the household may include other family members such as grandparents, aunts and uncles, cousins and so on. There are several advantages of living as a nuclear family.

Parents in a nuclear household are more likely to have a higher consistency with raising their children - meaning teaching discipline and appropriate behavior. Children receive consistent messages about behavioral expectations. Nuclear families have more daily routines, like eating dinner together and spending more time together adding to consistency.
