

- Generally an axis is an imaginary or physical line which prescribes an object's movement. An axis also includes a point that is known as center of gravity.
- Another imaginary line which divides the earth into two equal parts running through the middle of the globe is called Equator.
- The North half of the equator is called as Northern Hemisphere. The south half of the equator is called as southern hemisphere. They are equal halves.

Lines of Latitude or Parallel →

