

Difference between input and output devices

Input device

Output device

i) An input device is something that send information into the computer

i) An output device is something that has information get from computer.

ii) It accepts raw data.

It reflects Processed data.

iii) It is commanded by the user.

iii) It is commanded by the processor.

iv) It helps the computer to accept the data.

iv) It helps the computer to display the results.

Input device

Output device

v) It collects data from the user and gives it to the processor.

v) It takes the processed data from the processor and gives it to the user.

vi) The examples of input devices are Mouse and key board.

vi) The examples of output devices are Monitor and printer.