Banyan tree

The national tree of india is the Banyan tree. The Banyan tree is huge from outside and sends new shoots from it underlying foundations, making the tree a knot of branches, roots and trunks. The banyan tree towers brilliantly over its neighbours and has the vastest arriving at foundations of every known tree, covering a few land sections. The existence of the banyan tree is extremely long and is considered an everlasting tree. The biggest banyan tree in india lives at the indian botanical garden in Shibpur, Howrah in west Bengal. It is around 25m tall, and the shelter cover is around 420m, with more than 2000 elevated roots. Banyan trees are perhaps the biggest tree on the planet and grow up to 20-25m with branches spreading up to 100m. It has an enormous trunk that has smooth greyish earthy coloured bark and is fluted. The plant might be killed inside a lot more limited size by an uncommon strategy known as the Bonsai. The tree is vital in hinduism. It is very beneficial for health. Banyan tree wood used as fuel which makes food and their trade is also a great source of income.
